Park for want of the price of a bed. The same clothing was on his back when he surrendered to the police as when on the Saturday previous he had been driven from his father's house. Not a single blood-stain was found upon any of his garments, save the shirt, which the police have handed over to a chemist for examination. On the sleeve a couple of spots that looked like blood-stains were found. There was a scratch o nhis hand which might have caused the stains.

An "Evening World" reporter spent several hours yesterday going thoroughly into the question of the clothing. The only coat William was known to possess was the black cutaway which he wore yesterday. It was the same coat which every one of the witnesses saw him in. James Welsh, of the Receiving Ship Vermont, Stabbed.

Walter Bresses Well.

Walter Henry, the so-called "good son," always dressed in a dark-blue suit, and the cloth always looked new and neat. He was careful of his dress, just as William was the opposite. The police have never naked to examine his clothing. They did not think it necessary. From the first they never had the least suspicion of him, nor have they now.

Not the least sensational part of the proceedings yesterday was the story given out by the police that Walter Henry, the "good son" of the murdered man, had fied, but which "The Evening World" proved to be untrue before the day was over. Navy Yard, was stabbed to death early
